Information on beneficiary nominations

All NAB employee members, Ex-employee members and Spouse members can make a binding nomination while only NAB employee members can make a non-binding death benefit nomination.

1. Binding nomination

A binding nomination, if valid at the time of your death, is binding on the Trustee. This means, if you die, the Trustee is required by law to pay your death benefit to the person(s) you have nominated, in the proportions you have nominated (subject to any contrary court order or family law splitting exceptions). If your binding nomination is valid, we are obliged to follow it regardless of how your personal circumstances may have changed.

How do I make a valid binding nomination?

Complete the form attached and return it to us via mail, fax or email. A valid binding nomination must be:

- made in writing, and
- signed and witnessed by two adults over 18 years of age (who are not nominated as beneficiaries on the form).

How long will my binding nomination remain valid?

A binding nomination is valid for three years from the date the form is first signed, last confirmed or amended unless an event occurs to invalidate your nomination (see below).

Before your binding nomination is due to expire, we'll write to you requesting you to confirm your current binding nomination or make a new nomination.

Can my binding nomination become invalid?

Your binding nomination will become invalid if:

- a nominated beneficiary dies before payment of the benefit (even if other nominated beneficiaries are alive)
- a nominated beneficiary is not a dependant or legal personal representative at the time of your death. For example, if:
  - you nominated your de facto and you subsequently separate, or
  - you nominated your husband or wife and you subsequently divorce.
- you are transferred from this Fund to another fund.

If your nomination is found to be invalid at the time of your death, the Trustee will take your nomination into consideration but will not be bound by it.

If your binding nomination has expired, the Trustee will treat the benefit as if a binding nomination had never been made.

The Trustee will consider all of your dependants and decide who receives your death benefit, taking into consideration your personal circumstances at the time of your death.

2. Non-binding nomination

The Trustee will consider all of your dependants and decide who receives your death benefit, taking into consideration your personal circumstances at the time of your death. The Trustee will refer to your non-binding nomination when making a decision, but is not bound by it.

To make, amend or cancel a non-binding nomination, you can either:

- complete Steps 1, 2 and 3 of this form, or
- log in via our secure member website nabgsf.com.au

3. No nomination

If you do not make a beneficiary nomination, the Trustee will consider all of your dependants and decide who receives your death benefit, taking into consideration your personal circumstances at the time of your death.

Who can I nominate?

Your death benefit can be paid to any combination of your dependants or legal personal representative. You can nominate any of the following:

- your spouse (including a legally married, de facto or same sex partner)
- your children (including stepchildren, ex-nuptial or adopted children) and as defined in the Family Law Act 1975)
- any other person (as permitted by the relevant law) wholly or partially financially dependent on you at the time of your death
- a legal personal representative (the executor of your will or the administrator of your estate), or
- any other person with whom you are in an interdependency relationship (as defined in the relevant law) at the time of your death.

What is an interdependency relationship?

Generally, an interdependency relationship exists where two people (whether or not related by family):

- have a close personal relationship
- live together
- one or each of them provides the other with financial support, and
- one or each of them provides the other with domestic support and personal care.

Two persons may also have an interdependency relationship if they have a close personal relationship and the only reason they fail to satisfy all the conditions above is that either or both of them suffer from a physical, intellectual or psychiatric disability, or they are temporarily living apart because, for example, one is overseas or in prison.

Legal personal representative (your estate)

Your legal personal representative is either the executor under your will or a person granted letters of administration for your estate if you die without having left a valid will.

What is a financial dependant?

Someone who is financially dependent upon you at the time of your death. The definition of a dependant under superannuation legislation may be different to the definition which is used for tax purposes. For more information we recommend you speak with your financial or legal adviser.

Can I nominate more than one beneficiary?

There's no limit to the number of beneficiaries you can nominate, providing they are your dependants or legal personal representative.

If you wish to nominate more beneficiaries than this form allows, you can photocopy or download a blank form from nabgsf.com.au Please ensure you complete Steps 1, 2 and 3 on both forms and, if making a binding nomination, complete the Witness declaration on both forms and submit them together.

Is tax payable on my death benefit?

The tax applicable on death benefits payable to beneficiaries depends on a number of factors. As the tax rules in relation to death benefits are complex, you should seek professional advice before making your nomination.

Keeping up to date

We recommend you review your nomination as your personal circumstances change, for example if you:

- marry, divorce or change partner, or
- become a parent, step-parent or guardian.

You can amend or cancel your nomination at any time.

More Information

Your beneficiary nomination is reported on your annual Member benefit statement. You can also view your current nomination via our secure member website nabgsf.com.au or by contacting us on 1300 55 7586.
